

Dressed for museum tour

Updated on the 04 February

2008
13:55

Published 04/02/2008 09:23

Print this

MUSEUMS large and small impressed the High Sheriff, Howard Guard, when he made a whistle-stop tour across Herts last week.

Mr Guard visited Tring's Local and Natural History Museums, the Dacorum Heritage Trust in Berkhamsted, The Museum of Technology in Hemel Hempstead, Redbourn Village Museum and the Redbournbury Watermill.

Well-suited to the occasion in traditional garb, he enjoyed seeing the different characters of the museums, as well as the county's old buildings, said Julie Massey, of the Hertfordshire Museums Partnership, which organised the tour.

Mr Guard said: "Hertfordshire remains an undiscovered secret for many people who just see it as a place to drive through, commute from, or occupy during office hours.

"Our heritage is vibrant, we just need to open the door to let people see it."